

INTRODUCTION

Steve Worboys and I began this calendar in 1980 or 1981 when we discovered that the exact dates of many events survive from Roman antiquity, the most famous being the ides of March murder of Caesar. Flipping through a few books on Roman history revealed a handful of dates, and we believed that to fill every day of the year would certainly be impossible. From 1981 until 1989 I kept the calendar, adding dates as I ran across them. In 1989 I typed the list into the computer and we began again to plunder books and journals for dates, this time recording sources. Since then I have worked and reworked the Calendar, revising old entries and adding many, many more.

The Roman Calendar

The calendar was reformed twice, once by Caesar in 46 BC and later by Augustus in 8 BC. Each of these reforms is described in A. K. Michels' book The Calendar of the Roman Republic. In an ordinary pre-Julian year, the number of days in each month was as follows:

29 January	31 May	29 September
28 February	29 June	31 October
31 March	31 Quintilis (July)	29 November
29 April	29 Sextilis (August)	29 December.

The Romans did not number the days of the months consecutively. They reckoned backwards from three fixed points: The kalends, the nones, and the ides. The kalends is the first day of the month. For months with 31 days the nones fall on the 7th and the ides the 15th. For other months the nones fall on the 5th and the ides on the 13th. The position of the kalends, nones, and ides were not changed in either of the two reforms. III Non. Ian. is to be read "three before the nones of January" which, considering the Roman inclusive count, falls on January 3. V Kal. Iun. is "five before the kalends of June," or May 28. The day before one of the three reference days is labeled "pridie." Prid. Kal. Ian. is always the last day of December.

Fortunately, each time the calendar was reformed, the positions in the month of annual events and anniversaries remained unchanged. The Saturnalia always began on December 17th, even though the representation for that day changed from XIII Kal. Ian. to XV Kal. Ian. to XVI Kal. Ian. Naturally then we arranged the months according to the modern reckoning, adding the Roman notations for reference.

The old Roman year had 355 days. To account for the ten day error there was an intercalary month placed inside February every few years. There seemed to be no rule as to when the month was to be added, and the intercalation probably became a political tool in the late Republic. By the time of Caesar the calendar was months off the solar year, and to rectify the problem the Dictator hired the Greek astronomer Sosigenes to reform the calendar.

47 BC was the last normal year of the old Republican calendar. 46 BC was "the year of confusion," or better, "the last year of confusion." To rectify the calendar year to the solar year, 67 extra intercalary days were added to the normal 23, making a year of 445 days. We do not know the precise location in the calendar of these intercalary days. 45 BC was then the first Julian year. The lengths of many of the months were changed, and instead of an intercalary month, an intercalary day was to be placed every fourth year. This was to be an extra VI Kal. Mar. (six before the kalends of March), to be called Bissexto Kal. Mar. (thus "bissextile year"). With a normal 29 day February, VI Kal. Mar. fell on February 25th. It is not known if the extra day was added before or after the ordinary VI Kal. Mar. We have placed it after VI Kal. Mar. in our calendar. The year then looked like this:

31 January	31 May	31 September
29/30 February	30 June	30 October
31 March	31 July	31 November
30 April	30 Sextilis (August)	30 December.

Unfortunately the priests responsible for the maintenance of the calendar misinterpreted the instruction “every fourth year,” and imposed their inclusive count to produce a leap day every three years. This error was detected nearly four decades later, when in 8 BC Augustus altered the Julian calendar. First, the leap years: The years BC 42, 39, 36, 33, 30, 27, 24, 21, 18, 15, 12, and 9 were bissextile. Because too many days had been added, there was no intercalation until AD 8, when the normal once-each-four-years was obeyed. There is no reason to believe that any problems occurred after this. Second, “To satisfy his vanity” Augustus desired a month to be named after himself. His choice was Sextilis, the month after July, in which he had enjoyed so many illustrious successes. But it had only 30 days under the Julian reform, so in order to correct this injustice he changed the lengths of each month from Sextilis (August) through December: whichever had 31 days now has 30, and whichever had 30 days now has 31. The extra day added by this permutation was taken from February, which had enjoyed 30 days for only the 12 leap years mentioned above. Beginning 8 BC we have:

31 January	31 May	30 September
28/29 February	30 June	31 October
31 March	31 July	30 November
30 April	31 August	31 December.

This is the version of the Julian calendar which remained unaltered until the sixteenth century. England abandoned the Julian calendar in the eighteenth century, and Russia in the twentieth century.

For pre-reform dates we attribute an event to its place in the calendar in use at the time, rather than calculate its Julian date. The Romans themselves did likewise when they considered anniversaries.

Notation

[Bar, 4] means that the date (not necessarily other details) is to be found in Barnes’ The New Empire of Diocletian and Constantine on page 4. See the list of sources in the back. If you see [L-AM III, 23ed], the III refers to the volume, and the “ed” means the date was supplied by the editor of the work. For [Huzar, 23n], the “n” means the date was taken from a footnote or endnote.

A date beginning with a dash (—) occurred in the same year (and day) as the preceding event. Thus Ovid was born on the very day that Sextus Pompey was voted a naval command (see March 20).

All annual events, such as festivals, are printed in italics.

When we find that a certain day was sacred to some deity, the date is usually associated with a particular temple and its dedication. A typical cult day is that of Fortuna Equestris on August 13. In 180 BC Q. Fulvius Flaccus vowed to build this temple during a campaign against the Celtiberians. On August 13, 173 BC his temple was dedicated near the Theater of Pompey. Other temples to Fortuna were dedicated on different days, like her temple in the Forum Boarium, which was dedicated June 11. May 25 was the day sacred to Fortuna at her temple on the Quirinal.

When the year of dedication is known, it is included as if it was not an annual event, but the entry remains in italics because the dedication day became an annual celebration, in which sacrifices and prayers were offered. Annual events with no date are preceded by a “●”.

The kalends of each month were sacred to Juno and the Ides were sacred to Jupiter.

There are several Hellenistic dates in the Calendar, mostly associated with Alexander the Great. These were computed according to the Julian calendar and have no relation to the pre-Julian Roman events listed on the same day.

Other Comments

This calendar is not a serious work. Though I have tried to be rigorous and scholarly, my main aim has been to have some fun with Roman history. The work has been most useful when I include ancient events on birthday cards. A wall calendar with an event for each day would be nice, also.

Over 1,750 events and festivals are included, and it is not free of mistakes. Any corrections, additions, or clarifications are wholly welcome. Often our sources contradict one another. We have seen the death of Elagabalus placed at March 6, 11, 12, and 13. Nero's suicide took place on three days: June 6, 9, and 11. Rarely do the sources indicate that the date is in question, or that others have foolishly promoted a different date. Some historians are not even aware of the pre-Julian calendar, like [Kap] who claims that Cicero delivered a speech on December 31, 63 BC. December had only 29 days that year! We have kept many sources for seemingly secure dates as protection against typographical errors (there are many out there), but eventually we will discard many.

There is still a lot more to do. Standard works like Cicero's complete letters and the Theodosian Code remain largely unplundered. If you have comments or corrections, write me at
